Circulated to 108,000 homes and businesses by Hackney Council

Issue 382 4 July 2016

The Mayor of Hackney, Jules Pipe, announced he is leaving after working for residents for 20 years; opening the Hackney Central to Hackney Downs Interchange (above)

MOVING ON UP

AFTER 14 years as Hackney's elected Mayor, Jules Pipe CBE, has announced he will be standing down next month to join the new Mayor of London, Sadiq Khan, at City Hall.

On 30 June, Mayor Pipe revealed he was leaving to become Deputy Mayor of London for Planning, Regeneration and Skills.

He was elected to the Council in 1996, and served as a backbencher through the turbulent late 1990s when the Council suffered a managerial, political and financial breakdown that led to the near collapse of many Council services.

In 2001, he became Leader of the Council, and in 2002, one of the UK's first directly elected mayors, with a mandate to fix the Council's many problems.

He is widely credited with having turned the Council into a high performing and efficient authority, and leaves Hackney a very different place, with excellent schools and transport links, as well as renewed public facilities.

He led a campaign to secure the development of the London Overground and East London Line extension, putting Hackney on the tube map for the first time.

He was also instrumental in transforming Hackney's failing education system. Overseeing the opening of six brand new secondary schools; driving forward the Government's Building Schools for the Future programme, which saw all existing secondaries rebuilt or refurbished; with almost every school in the borough now rated 'good' or 'outstanding' by Ofsted.

Mayor Pipe also took the Council from financial chaos to stability, delivered a record 10 year Council Tax freeze, and has overseen the management of £120million in austerity cuts, while protecting frontline services.

One of his greatest achievements was securing Hackney's Olympic legacy, ensuring the borough's vision of a digital and creative employment hub on the Broadcast and Media centre sites in Hackney Wick was fulfilled, creating up to 7,000 new jobs.

Mayor Pipe said: "Sadiq Khan has offered me an amazing opportunity to serve our city, but the decision to leave was not an easy one to make.

"It's been an enormous privilege to serve the residents of Hackney for two decades and I'm proud of everything the Council has achieved: the transformation of our schools, the clean streets, the new homes, a decade of frozen Council Tax, and award-winning services making a difference to the lives of our residents."

The Mayor of London, Sadiq Khan, added: "Jules Pipe will be a fantastic addition to my top team at a time when London needs a stronger voice more than ever."

Mayor Pipe will formally resign at the end of this month. Deputy Mayor, Cllr Philip Glanville, will fulfil the functions of the position from that point until a new Mayor is elected. An election is expected to be held in September.

More school places

THE Council's planning committee has given the green light for more than 210 new school places to be built in the borough, as well as improved facilities for existing schools.

The Council submitted the applications to build a new Nightingale Primary School and nursery on the former Downsview School site, in Tiger Way, E5, as well as a new home for New Regents College, on the site of its former upper school, in Nile Street, N1.

To fund these ambitious school building projects, the Council is acting as a developer and will provide a total of 264 private homes to help pay for the works.

“By 2021, Hackney needs an extra 1,260 primary school places and two new secondary schools”

The programme will also raise around £12million to fund affordable housing in the borough.

Cllr Anntoinette Bramble, Cabinet Member for Children's Services, said: "This is a really important step in our programme to ensure that we have enough local school places for Hackney pupils. By 2021, Hackney needs an extra 1,260 primary school places and two new secondary schools, however we've got a £40million gap to fill.

"Funding cannot be found in existing budgets, so by building homes for private sale, we plan to provide a significant sum for affordable housing and go some way to covering the cost of delivering the high quality schools our residents have come to expect and our pupils deserve."

"By acting as the developer, the Council will be able to ensure that the maximum amount of money is available to deliver these priorities as it eliminates the need for a private developer to factor in profits for itself and any shareholders."

Building work should start this autumn and be completed by late 2018.

The plans are a key part of the Council's wider school places programme, which will see two new secondary schools built, and some school sites remodelled to make best use of Council owned sites.

Message from the Mayor

Mayor Pipe's farewell

THE decision to stand down and take a role at City Hall under Sadiq Khan was not an easy one. The new job, as Deputy Mayor of London for Planning, Regeneration and Skills, is an amazing opportunity, but leaving Hackney Town Hall after 20 years – 14 of those years as your elected Mayor – will be a difficult thing to do.

My time here in Hackney has been an incredible experience, leading the Council's journey from being the worst in the country 15 years ago, to being one of the best. I am proud of the new public infrastructure across the borough – from new libraries and leisure facilities, six new secondary schools (and two more secured), 19 new children's centres and five new youth hubs – to the transformative London Overground in which Hackney played a major role. As I leave office, we may be about to secure a deal to restore Haggerston Baths and bring it back into use.

I am proud of Hackney's cleaner, safer streets, its economic growth, of the part we played in hosting the London 2012 Games, and the employment legacy we secured. Most of all though, I am proud to leave behind some of the best schools in London. Families used to leave Hackney to get their children out of our schools. Now every child has access to good and outstanding schools. It is this that will have the biggest effect on the life chances of the children growing up here. It is access to a high quality education for all that will most effectively tackle entrenched inequality, and issues like gang crime. The big challenge for Hackney now, is to ensure that its growing prosperity can benefit everyone who lives here. That's a challenge for the whole of London, and one on which I hope I can make an impact in my new role.

Hackney is a unique place, and it has been an incredible privilege to serve the borough and its communities for so many years. This borough represents the best of London; its diversity, creativity and tolerance. In the recent EU referendum, Hackney had one of the highest votes in the UK to stay in the EU with 78.5 per cent of people voting to Remain. That reflects the kind of place this is: proudly international, outward-looking and optimistic.

One of the best things about this job has been the opportunity to meet so many incredible Hackney people: community volunteers, inspirational young people, creative entrepreneurs, and dedicated public servants, every one of them a passionate advocate for this place. The spirit of Hackney and its communities is a formidable force, and one that will carry the borough forwards. I would like to thank all those who have supported me during my time as Mayor. As a resident, I will continue to enjoy everything that is special about Hackney, and I hope from City Hall I can continue to make a difference here.

Jules Pipe

WAR veterans and members of the armed forces were on parade in Hackney to celebrate the contribution made by the military.

They were joined on 25 June by Meg Hillier MP; the Speaker of Hackney, Cllr Rosemary Sales; Lieutenant Colonel R E F Morris, Representative Deputy

Lieutenant for Hackney; and other civic dignitaries. Over the last decade, the Hackney 3 Military Intelligence Battalion has deployed 440 soldiers and officers in active service. The parade was part of Armed Forces Day, a national celebration of service people, past and present.

A great way into work

RESENTERS looking for jobs and training opportunities can now speak to staff from the Council's Ways into Work service at a regular drop-in advice session.

The service places unemployed residents in key growth sectors – including construction, customer service, retail, hospitality, and fashion – as well as providing training opportunities to develop candidates' skills with interview workshops and coaching.

Ways into Work has helped to find jobs for unemployed residents with big names such like Nike, which recently opened an outlet store at the Hackney Walk fashion hub (pictured); ping pong bar Bounce in Shoreditch; and a number of construction companies building some of the borough's new regeneration estates.

Cllr Guy Nicholson, Cabinet Member for Regeneration, said: "If you are a resident looking for work or would like to gain new skills to find the career you want, register with the Ways into Work service online or meet them in person at Hackney Service Centre. "Working closely with local businesses, Ways into Work have a range of job opportunities for residents and all are welcome to get in touch."

The Ways into Work team will be at Hackney Service Centre, 1 Hillman Street, E8, every Monday, Wednesday and Thursday afternoon, as well as on Friday mornings.

The Council made a colourful splash at this year's London Pride parade with artist Stik and the 'I Love Hackney' black cab; revellers were joined by London Mayor, Sadiq Khan (taking a selfie above)

Proud of Hackney

Street artist Stik joined the Council's float at London Pride to support LGBT+ communities

HACKNEY was out and proud at this year's London Pride parade, supporting LGBT+ (lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, plus) communities in the capital and beyond.

And the support doesn't stop there, as this year a magnificent banner created for the event on 25 June by world-famous street artist Stik, will be auctioned to fund an LGBT+ project within Hackney.

The centre piece of the Council's Pride walking group was the 'I Love Hackney' black cab, which was crowned by Stik's banner depicting two people holding hands against a rainbow backdrop.

As the parade moved

“It was great to march with Hackney residents, coming together at Pride to celebrate the LGBT community” through central London, some of the million plus spectators included Hackney residents who had made their own Stik placards from a poster in Hackney Today.

Young resident Imogen brought her homemade banner for Stik – who joined the Hackney contingent on the day – to sign. She included her own slogan on the back: 'Be free, have fun, make friends.'

Her younger brother Alexander also brought along a miniature version that included a heart on the back, where he had also written the word 'love'.

Hackney's walking group was organised and led by Monica Matthias and Nick Corker, the Council's Out and About co-chairs. They were joined by East End drag king Richard, who gave out copies of Hackney Today for Stik to sign for the crowds.

Pride celebrates and represents LGBT+ culture and history, and links organisations across the UK.

More than 300 groups took part in the parade, which was led by an Absolutely Fabulous themed float, headed by Patsy (Jennifer Saunders) and Eddie (Joanna Lumley).

Among the 400,000 people who joined the march was London Mayor, Sadiq Khan, who took part in a minute's silence for the victims of the Orlando nightclub mass shooting. He quoted Martin Luther King Jr during his speech in Trafalgar Square, saying: "Hate cannot drive out hate; only love can do that."

Cllr Philip Glanville, Deputy Mayor of Hackney, who took part in the parade, said: "It was great to march with Council colleagues and residents, all coming together at Pride to celebrate the LGBT+ community.

"We were very lucky that Stik created such a powerful banner which looked great on the day and can now be auctioned to fund an LGBT+ project in Hackney."

The banner, created by Stik in collaboration with Flagmakers, who do work for the Queen, is set to go on display at Hackney Museum until the end of the year.

Stik said: "Hackney has many different types of people who are not afraid of showing their love for each other. It is a great place to live and I am proud to be representing at Pride."

The Council launched a new report, 'Promoting Enterprise and Regeneration' during London Tech Week

Let's get technical

THE Council joined forces with Tech City UK to launch a new best practice report, 'Promoting Enterprise and Regeneration' to a packed crowd during London Tech Week.

During the event, at Hackney House in Curtain Road, local business people spoke about how the Council has worked with Hackney's tech and creative industries to drive investment and create employment opportunities in and around Shoreditch.

They also heard from Lesley Smith, Head of Public Policy for Amazon UK and Ireland, about the organisation's plans to move their HQ to Shoreditch next year.

“Improving opportunities for residents remains our clear goal and we continue to work closely with businesses”

The report celebrates Hackney's collaborative approach and aims to inspire other local authorities who want to work more closely with their local business community.

More than 100 people attended the launch, on 21 June, which was introduced by Gerard Grech, CEO of Tech City UK, and Mayor of Hackney, Jules Pipe.

The panel discussion, chaired by Alex Wood, of tech publication 'The Memo', featured Charles Armstrong, founder of The Trampery; Jason Goodman, of Albion; Calrin Frier, of Brookfields, and Cllr Guy Nicholson, Cabinet Member for Regeneration.

They discussed how residents benefit from the development of Tech City, how rising house prices have affected the industry, and how the Council has built relationships with companies to help shape the local business community.

Mayor Pipe said: "Whilst technology has emerged as the jewel in Hackney's business landscape, the potential remains for the sector to play a leading role in the continued development of the borough, not least the resulting creative and hospitality industries.

"We continue to connect all of these sectors with schools and our own employment programmes in order to improve residents' job prospects. Improving opportunities for residents remains our clear goal and we continue to work closely with businesses to ensure that local people benefit from the world-class industry on their doorstep."

Nicola Thorp's flat shoes on display at Hackney Museum

RESIDENT Nicola Thorp was sent home from work without pay

Nicola's shoes will be on display at Hackney Museum for refusing to remove her flat, black shoes and put on high heels.

The company which ran the reception at the City firm had a 'female grooming policy' which insisted female colleagues wear shoes with a heel height of between two and four inches.

After the incident six months ago, Nicola, 27, decided to make a stand for female workers and started a petition calling for a change in UK law to make it illegal for employers to require women to wear high heels to work.

This petition has since gained over 148,000 signatures and will be debated in Parliament later this month.

To coincide with the debate, Nicola has donated her shoes to Hackney Museum's collection. They will go on display in the museum on Reading Lane from the middle of the month, alongside information on the campaign.

News in brief

Trade apprenticeships now open for 16 to 18-year-olds

THE Council has launched a trade apprenticeship scheme for those aged between 16 and 18-years-old, who live or study in the borough.

Hackney's housing service is currently looking for young people to become apprentices in the construction industry, learning skills including carpentry, electrical, gas, multi-trade and plumbing.

Apprentices will be provided with a structured training programme, and over 18s will also be paid the London Living Wage. The programme includes on-site training and attending college to gain an industry-recognised qualification. The apprenticeships are between two and four years long, depending on the trade.

Lucy Ransom, 18, a first year apprentice electrician with the housing service, said: "The apprentice scheme has really opened doors for me. I get to learn in an interesting hands-on way alongside qualified professionals."

For more info, or to apply, visit: www.hackney.gov.uk/apprenticeships; or call: 020 8356 6935. The closing date for applications is 5pm on 8 July.

Applications for grants open

GRANTS of between £5,000 and £30,000 are now open for voluntary and community groups for initiatives that will be delivered between April and March 2018. Applications for 'Hackney: A Place for Everyone main grant programme 2017/18' should promote social inclusion, encourage independence, or build positive relations between different communities.

In addition, organisations can make a second application for play schemes that deliver high-quality initiatives for children and young people during the school holidays. For more info on how to apply, visit: www.hackney.gov.uk/community-grants

Hundreds of Hackney schoolchildren have been proving you don't need to compete against others to be a winner in the Personal Bests programme

By Sheerie Barker

PUPILS discovered that beating your best is more important than beating the rest, in a healthy lifestyle programme proving that sport is for everyone.

Hundreds of primary schoolchildren gathered at Hackney Marshes on 29 June, for the 'Personal Bests' final, a programme which encourages children to strive to improve their individual sporting achievements.

The sounds of cheering lifted the 400 plus young athletes, who attempted to beat their previous high scores in events including javelin, triple jump, shot put and speed bounce.

Valentina Vasquez, nine, from Randal Cremer Primary School, E2, said: "I had so much fun because I only had to focus on beating my goals and I knew I could do it."

The event kicked off with live entertainment by talented dance group 'Dynamics' from Kingsmead Primary School, E9, performing an African-inspired piece.

Different school teams came dressed as former Olympic host countries for an opening ceremony-style competition. Tyssen Primary School, N16, represented Brazil and took the crown for their colourful and vibrant outfits.

Children, aged eight to 11, of all levels, including

I had so much fun because I only had to focus on beating my goals and I knew I could do it those with disabilities and special educational needs, jumped, ran, threw and hopped to beat their personal bests while music blasted across the field. Everyone wore t-shirts with the motto 'Be The Best You Can Be' emblazoned across their backs.

First prize for the most improved school went to joint winners, Tyssen and Lauriston primaries.

Headteacher of Tyssen, Jackie

Benjamin, said: "We have children here who have never represented the school in any event so to see them improve and achieve is wonderful."

"I believe they can take this new confidence to the classroom and push themselves to be successful in all aspects of their lives."

Florin Dima, PE teacher at Lauriston, added: "It feels great to have jointly won – I'm so proud. The children deserve it. We've had an amazing year due to hard work and a lot of training."

First prize for the Year 3 and 4 athletics also went to Lauriston Primary School, E9. Mandeville Primary School, E5, was awarded first place for Year

5 and 6 athletics.

First launched in 2008 as a way to promote the London 2012 Games, Personal Bests is still going strong after nine years with an estimated 17,000 pupils and 45 schools taking part over the years.

Cllr Jonathan McShane, Cabinet Member for Health, Social Care and Culture, said: "I want to congratulate all those who have taken part. Personal Bests is about recognising and rewarding those who have done their utmost to improve themselves, many of whom may never have had the opportunity to compete before."

"The message is an important one: do your best in what you do and no one can ask any more of you."

"Personal Bests is a fantastic event. The children can take what they have learned in the programme back to academic school, showing that they can keep improving. This event proves that with hard work, you can always get better." Charlotte Gaylor, Assistant Head at Holmleigh Primary School

"Beating their personal best has made the children feel really good about themselves and boosts their confidence." Sam Sexton, Learning Mentor, Queensbridge Primary School

"What I like about Personal Bests is that it has a competitive element, but only to beat yourself. All children taking part can take away a sense of achievement. Kids need to be active and ambitious, and this event really helps with that." Adam Carroll, Teacher and PE Coordinator, 30, Gayhurst Community School

Lady on the roundabout

By Harriet Worsley

"I've lived in the same house and had the same business here since 1975," says Caroline Gregory. In fact, her pottery workshop, on Lauriston Road, is the oldest surviving business in Victoria Park Village and has become something of a local landmark. Its owner however, wasn't such a public figure, until now.

In May, Caroline became one of the first ever winners of the 'I Love Hackney Mayor's Civic Award', launched by the Council to recognise the borough's 'unsung heroes'.

"It was really quite an emotional ceremony," says Caroline. Adding: "The other five winners had all done such incredible things, but it was nice to have all my little activities read out by the Mayor. I was very touched indeed."

Those 'little activities' didn't truly begin until 2000. As a student, she studied furniture and ceramics in High Wycombe, moving to Bow when her husband's job brought them to London, and finally to Hackney where she still lives and works today.

Her life was filled with bringing up two young daughters, working as a potter, and teaching adult courses in woodwork locally. When her daughters grew up, Caroline began to look more closely at the community around her.

She says: "None of the things I've done have been planned, they've just crept up on me."

Take the roundabout

“I started to think that if the local businesses all clubbed together we could all make a bigger mark” that is opposite her pottery studio, for example.

She explains: "It was growing increasingly covered in weeds, so I got stuck in and started weeding it myself. But my plans got bigger and bigger until I had to apply for permission to look after it. Now I have the official contract."

The wildflower paradise she has created is treasured by locals. The lavender within it is a haven for bees, while her regular solo expeditions to tend to it have earned her the nickname 'Lady on the Roundabout'.

"I try to have things in flower all year round," Caroline says. She pays for the plants and equipment by picking the lavender and selling bags of it in her shop.

Caroline is not only concerned with the neighbourhood's nature, however. She adds: "It's so nice when people with businesses in the community also live within it. I feel so lucky to do that with my pottery, but with rents and leases going up, it's getting harder and harder for independent businesses to operate in that way."

The butchers, greengrocer and baker that had been trading locally when Caroline first moved in, gradually closed down.

She recalls: "I started to think that if the local businesses all clubbed together we could all make a bigger mark."

And so the Victoria Park Traders Association was born. They share information and advertising and even approached a butcher and fishmonger, inviting them to come to Victoria Park Village, and helping to turn it into a popular destination for independent shops.

Her community spirit doesn't stop there. When it struck her, in 2001, that Well Street Common could use some attention – new bins, for example, and benches – she helped to found the Well Street Common User Group. By 2010, the Common was so improved that it was awarded Green Flag Status, indicating that it is one of the best green spaces in the country.

Still, she says: "I really wasn't at all prepared to be given the Mayor's award, it came as a real surprise."

"I suppose it's something to be in the same home and the same business for over 40 years. But I've also been married to the same lovely man all that time, perhaps that's my greatest achievement of all!"

Bike Around the Borough is set to return on 6 July in an attempt to break a world record mass cycle ride

Mass cycle ride attempt

OVER 1,000 schoolchildren are set to take to the streets of Hackney in a mass cycle ride world record attempt.

The Council will try to smash the record for the most people in a 'bike bus' at its Bike Around the Borough event on 6 July, involving 50 local schools.

A bike bus is where a group of cyclists ride together along a set route, picking up people as they go. The current world record stands at 880, achieved by Banksia Beach State School, Australia, in 2014. Last year's event, “ Bike Around the Borough is one of the highlights of our calendar, and this year it will be bigger and better ” in partnership with the Met Police – when a total of 871 people took to Hackney's roads – is believed to be the largest ever single line bike ride of schoolchildren in the UK.

The route starts in Hackney Downs park at 10am, stopping at Clissold Park, then on to Haggerston Park where there will be BMX stunts, bike repairs and fun bike-related activities for those taking part. There will also be a bike-themed pop-up market with everything from craft beer and coffee, to pizza and oysters on offer, from 3.30pm to 9pm.

Cllr Feryal Demirci, Cabinet Member for Neighbourhoods and Sustainability, said: "Bike Around the Borough is one of the highlights of our calendar, and this year it will be bigger and better as we look forward to smashing the world record.

"But as well as being a fun day out, the event holds important themes: getting more children cycling as part of their daily lives, and reducing the dominance of the motor vehicle on our roads."

The Council expands fleet of electric vehicles to combat poor air quality

THE Council is rapidly expanding its fleet of electric vehicles and bicycles to help combat poor air quality.

Thanks to an award of £381,700 from the Mayor of London's Air Quality Fund, the Council is creating a fleet of about 50 electric vehicles and adding 30 extra bikes to its existing fleet. It is estimated that the new electric vehicles and bicycles will reduce emissions of particulate matter (hazardous particles suspended in the air, including dust, pollen, soot and smoke) by about 50kg and oxides of nitrogen (greenhouse gasses that contributes to climate change) by almost 0.6 tonnes every year by 2019.

Uptake of electric and other ultra-low emission vehicles (ULEVs) by local authorities and the public sector is currently very poor. Last year, the Department of Transport reported that only nine per cent of ULEVs were council-run.

Cllr Feryal Demirci, Cabinet Member for Neighbourhoods, said: "We want to do our part to help tackle poor air quality and build the greenest fleet in London and the UK. By sharing our experiences with local authorities across London and the UK we hope other councils will follow suit."

News in brief

Dinosaur bench created by pupils in school playground

A DINOSAUR which may have roamed the earth over 270 million years ago has been discovered in a local school. The 'Dimetrodon' was made by pupils at Lauriston Primary School, E9, using recycled materials, and now serves as a playground bench. Ninety plastic bottles were collected by pupils, parents and teachers to contribute towards the project, run by the environmental education organisation Cob in the Community. Pupils developed its design before building it themselves, stuffing the bottles with empty crisp packets and plastic wrappers to form 'building bricks' and sculpting them together using a mixture of local clay, sand and straw. The finished work now sits on car tyres sourced from a garage in Hackney.

Turn over a new leaf to waste less food and save money

WASTE less, save more is the message behind North London Waste Authority's latest project, called New Leaf. The initiative springs from research that suggests that two-thirds of the bagged salad people buy ends up going to waste, meaning that the energy and water that went into producing it is wasted too.

To change that, New Leaf is launching free cookery lessons and composting sessions, including a Surplus Salad Feast promising to 'unlock the potential of the food in your fridge'.

A free 'seasonal salad making' session at Redmond Community Centre, N4, is also set to take place on 27 July, from 7pm to 9pm.

The Kreutzer Sonata

6-23 July, Arcola Theatre, 24 Ashwin St, London E8 3DL

A GRIPPING stage adaptation of Tolstoy's most provocative novella is coming to the Arcola Theatre, following a critically acclaimed tour.

Adapted for the theatre by celebrated playwright Nancy Harris and RSC Associate Artist, Greg Hicks, the production follows the strange tale of a man on a train who confesses to a crime.

But is the fault his, or does it lie with Beethoven's Kreutzer Sonata? Tolstoy's own Kreutzer Sonata was banned in both Russia and America for its radical views on sex and marriage. Happily, this stage version has met with a more supportive reception. The ReviewsGate website said: "It could be the performance, possibly the production, of the English theatre's year." So don't miss out.

The Kreutzer Sonata is on from 6 to 23 July at the Arcola Theatre. Tickets range from £10 to £19. For more information visit: www.arcolatheatre.com

Competitions

Hackney Today offered readers a chance to win tickets to Wireless Festival in issue 381.

The lucky winner was N Lewis, E9.

SOME 100,000 local people will have gained qualifications at Hackney Community College (HCC) by the time its Principal, Ian Ashman, steps down next month.

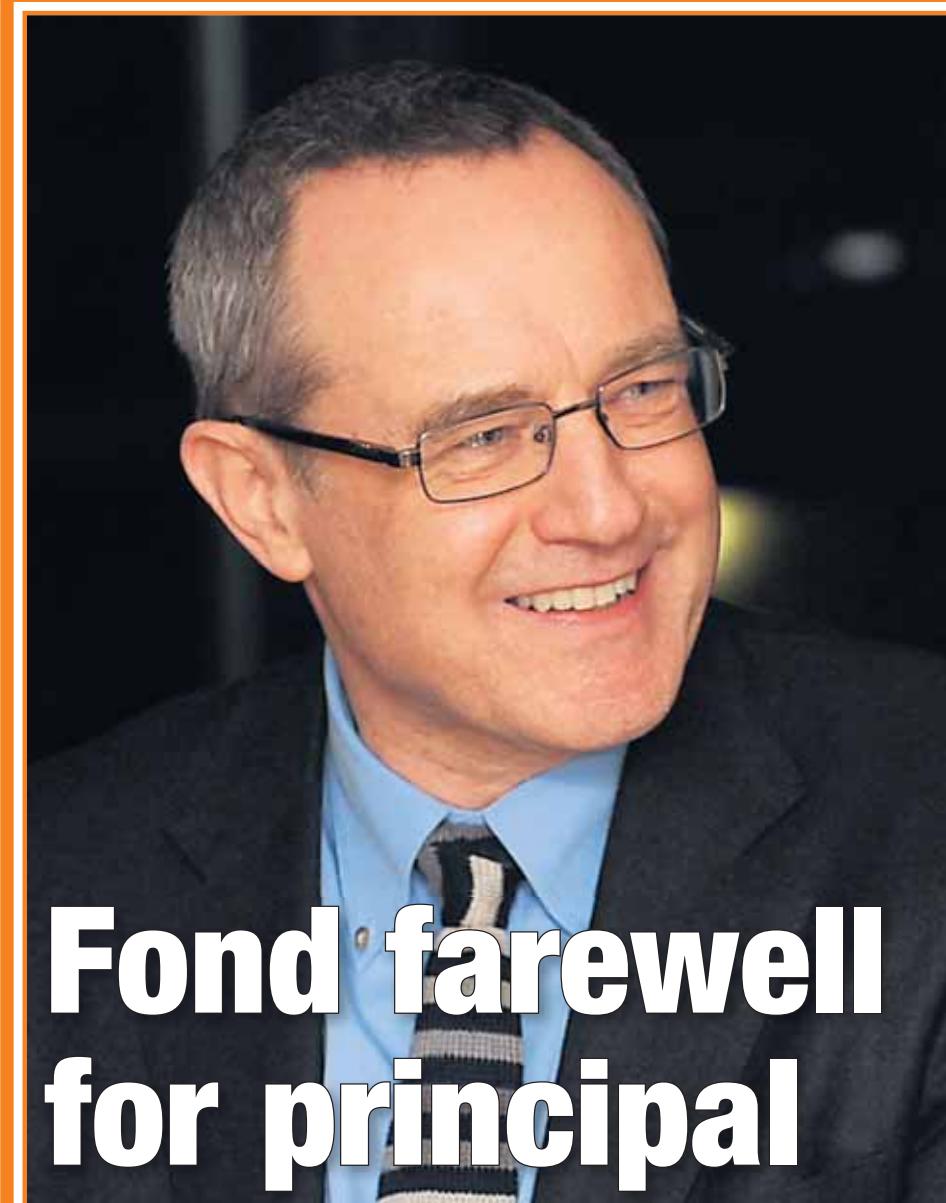

Joining as Deputy Principal in 1993, Ian's career at the college spans more than two decades, during which time he managed the development of its Shoreditch campus.

The college's successes under his leadership have been recognised by a series of high profile prizes, including the Queen's Anniversary Prize, the highest accolade a college can achieve.

Ian said: "Taking students and staff to Buckingham Palace to receive the Queen's Award was something we really enjoyed, but there have been so many high points in the job that singling out one is impossible.

"The annual student awards ceremony is always a highlight. Last year's Ofsted inspection report with its praise for our 'good' and 'outstanding' features was also a credit to the college, its governors, staff and students."

During the 2012 London Games, Ian helped to create thousands of volunteering and paid work placements for students and residents. As a result, the official organising committee acknowledged that the Games 'wouldn't have been the class act they were without HCC'.

Other key successes include the links he has forged between the college and Hackney's tech community. Further afield, his energetic lobbying in Westminster for fair funding for further education has also kept Hackney in the spotlight.

In the last year, Ian has managed the merger of HCC with neighbouring Tower Hamlets College to create a more sustainable organisation. HCC will keep its name and its courses, while Ian will help to oversee the transition in a new role as Merger Advisor. He is, however, moving on from his role as Principal to serve as President of the National Association of Colleges.

He told Hackney Today: "My hopes for the college's future is that it builds on the success of its constituent institutions to become an outstanding and financially secure college."

Schoolchildren learn about the plight of refugees at Hackney Museum

Cllr Sales with pupils from Mossbourne Parkside Academy

SCHOOLCHILDREN from across the borough joined the Speaker of Hackney, Cllr Rosemary Sales, to learn about the plight of refugees at a workshop in Hackney Museum.

The event was part of national Refugee Week and pupils listened to the stories of people who came to the borough as children, from across the world after fleeing their homes and seeking refuge in the UK.

Kaya, 11, from Mossbourne Parkside Academy, said: "We're here happily living our lives with our Playstations and mobile phones. I've got everything handed to me on a plate, but not everyone has that, and it's important to remember that."

Cllr Sales added: "It is great to see young people so engaged in learning about refugees and for them to understand the issues that affect other children their age around the world."

"With so much negative publicity about refugees and migrants, it is great to see positive messages being given about people who come to this country seeking refuge."

The week is a nationwide programme of events that celebrate the contribution of refugees to the UK, and also aims to encourage a better understanding between different communities.

News in brief

Keeping eyes open to FGM

AS the school holidays approach, local campaigner Hawa Sesay has issued a warning that thousands of girls across the UK could be vulnerable to female genital mutilation (FGM).

During what is known as 'cutting season' many girls are flown abroad and subjected to mutilation, often under the pretence of a summer holiday to visit relatives in Africa. Hawa is calling for people across the community to remain vigilant in order to prevent this practice, which causes extreme physical and psychological damage.

She says: "You might be a teacher, a policeman or just a concerned neighbour, but please keep your eyes open to this practice, and ask questions if you have worries about a girl you know."

If you are concerned that a child's welfare is at risk because of FGM, call: 0800 028 3550.

Securing stable finances

THEY'VE got money on their minds and an award-winning arts charity is helping Hackney's schoolchildren to channel that interest positively.

For a fortnight in June, over 50 pupils, aged between 10 and 11, at Tyssen Community Primary School, N16, worked with charity Create to develop their 'financial literacy'. The programme, called 'A Wealth of Stages', used games, debate, drama and writing to explore responsible attitudes towards money.

Create's co-founder and Chief Executive, Nicky Goulder, said: "A lack of financial awareness at a young age can lead to financial instability later in life. Through interactive drama sessions, students can become better equipped for the future." For more info, visit: createarts.org.uk

Young people from disadvantaged backgrounds took to the stage at the Arcola in Dalston with plays 'Besieged' and 'Ripple'

Playing up at Arcola

DISADVANTAGED young people referred by key workers, and parole and prison officers took to the stage at the Arcola thanks to a groundbreaking programme from the National Youth Theatre.

The scheme, called Playing Up, takes the form of an intensive nine-month acting course aimed at young Londoners who are not in education, employment or training.

Some come from hostels and have struggled with homelessness. Seventy-five per cent of this year's students are also from black, Asian and minority ethnic backgrounds.

It's about building up people's personalities and people recognising their super selves

Since the scheme was launched seven years ago, 150 young people aged between 19 and 24, have completed the course. Some 85 per cent of these have moved into employment or further education at top institutions including RADA and Central School of Speech and Drama.

Each year, the National Youth Theatre commissions two new plays to showcase the actors' abilities at the end of their course, and highlight the issues they face. This year's plays – 'Besieged' by Aisha Zia, and 'Ripple' by Monsay Whitney – were performed to rave reviews at the Arcola theatre, Dalston, between 30 June to 2 July.

Aref Akbari, a 24-year-old actor in 'Besieged', said: "I moved to London at 17 to get away from an abusive environment ... I've learned so much, it's been an inspiration. I have depression and anxiety, but my teachers have helped me overcome my emotional difficulties. The fact I survived to the end is because of their support."

Many of the young actors expressed a desire to pursue their acting further, now that their course has come to an end.

Carolina Giannetta, Playing Up's Co-Manager, said: "A lot of people who have come through the National Youth Theatre have moved on to fantastic careers as lawyers, business people and in the financial sector too. It's about building up people's personalities and people recognising their super selves."

Hackney Marshes Youth Football League seeks teams for new season

THE Hackney Marshes Youth Football League is looking for teams to sign up and join the competition when the new season starts from September.

This year, 32 clubs took part, with around 65 teams playing every Saturday, involving hundreds of boys and girls under the age of 16.

Terry Hartley, coach for Los Campos FC, which has four teams in the league, said: "This was our first season in the Hackney Marshes Youth League and I have to say it has been great. Off the field the league is well run and very supportive, offering courses to develop clubs and coaches, as well as some fun stuff for the kids, like meeting freestyle champion Andrew Henderson."

All of the match fixtures take place on Saturdays, at the home of grass roots football, Hackney Marshes. The league has increased in size over the last three years with eight teams playing over five divisional age ranges.

Rock on – with summer camp

FREE spaces are up for grabs at an exciting new music summer camp for girls and young women from Hackney, aged between 11 and 16.

Girls Rock London is part of a global movement that shares the belief that music can create personal and social change, and that gender does not prevent anyone from making and performing music.

During the project – set to take place from 1 to 6 August – participants will form bands, learn how to play a new instrument, then write and finally perform an original song at a live gig in front of family and friends.

Based at The Blue Studios, Dalston, event organisers are looking for girls and young women to take part. They do not need to have any previous musical experience.

A quarter of the places on the camp, usually worth £200, will be made free to Hackney residents.

To register an interest, or for more info, visit: www.girlsrocklondon.com; or e-mail: girlsrocklondon@gmail.com

Be a volunteer police cadet

A NEW crime fighting force is in town, and it is recruiting youngsters from Hackney into its ranks.

The British Transport Police launched its Volunteer Police Cadets programme last summer. It has two branches – one in Birmingham, the other in London – and is a uniformed youth group for young people, aged 13 to 18, who are interested in making a difference within their communities and learning about policing or the law.

The London branch meet every week at the British Transport Police training school, near Highbury and Islington train station. Membership is free, and cadets take part in activities including advising police on youth issues, assisting them with surveys, and training for qualifications such as the Duke of Edinburgh Award. Women's fitness class, at the Kings Crescent Estate, with participant Michelle (in striped t-shirt)

One health, one you

FREE and low cost fitness and cookery classes have been launched in Hackney to encourage residents to take control of their health.

One You Hackney aims to help people be more active, eat well, drink less and lead healthier lifestyles. Across the borough there are estate-based fitness classes for only £1, free fitness classes in parks, and free healthy cooking and eating courses.

Classes include zumba and fitness circuits for adults; judo and capoeira for children; chair-based exercises for older residents;

“We are encouraging residents to put themselves first and do something about their own health” and women-only body conditioning that parents can bring their children to.

Residents looking for support to improve their health can also take a free NHS health check at one of four estate-based health hubs in the borough at Stamford Hill, N16; New Kingshold Estate, E9; Pembury Estate, E8; and Marsh Hill, E9.

Michelle, who took part in a women's fitness class at Kings Crescent Estate, said: "I have asthma and joint problems, but I've been able to do all of the exercises and am hoping to move on to the harder ones. I would recommend this class to everyone whatever their shape, size or fitness."

Cllr Jonathan McShane, Cabinet Member for Health, Social Care and Culture, said: "It's a disturbing fact that unhealthy living before and throughout middle age is responsible for around 40 per cent of all deaths in England, costing the NHS more than £11 billion a year.

"That's why we are encouraging residents to put themselves first and do something about their own health by taking part."

Improved physical and mental health for participants of the Wellbeing Games

THE Wellbeing Games welcomed patients and their carers to Queen Elizabeth Olympic Park last month, to celebrate healthy living.

Residents of Hackney, Tower Hamlets and Newham who are cared for by the East London NHS Foundation Trust were invited to take part in taster sessions of yoga, boxing, zumba and football.

The games' coordinator Mark Blythe, explained: "Poverty can be a barrier to doing exercise. Today is about meeting new people, getting healthy and trying out a new sport."

Cooking demonstrations from food education charity

Bags of Taste also showed people how to cook healthy meals for less than £1.

Food educator Alicia Weston said: "Nutrition is important for good mental wellbeing, so our students learn how to cook popular meals that are healthy. We know that debt is also associated with mental health, so learning how to cook meals for under £1 can really help people."

Jane, who attended the event, said: "I know that physical health is as important as my mental wellbeing. Today, I got to try out different activities and get on the road to improving my physical health."

News in brief

Hitting the high notes at work

AN occupational therapist at Homerton hospital has an unusual CV, which includes a Christmas number one. Bethany Hemming came to work in Hackney from University Hospital Lewisham. It was there that she joined the NHS Choir in 2012, formed in response to TV choirmaster Gareth Malone's 'sing while you work' campaign. The following year, the choir recorded 'Bridge Over You'. Last year, following a vast social media campaign, the single beat Justin Bieber's 'Love Yourself' to the coveted Christmas number one slot.

Today, she works in the Graham Stroke Ward at the hospital, but she hasn't left singing behind.

She says: "I often sing to and with patients on the ward. There is lots of evidence to suggest that using music as part of therapy improves outcomes for stroke patients and it brightens up their day."

New walking football sessions

THEY think it's all over ... but local people who hung their football boots up decades ago are now discovering that it is not.

Leyton Orient and the Council have teamed up to launch new walking football sessions. Taking place weekly on the new astro turf pitches at Mabley Green, the groups are designed for men and women aged 50 and over.

Walking football follows the same rules as five-a-side, with a couple of key differences:

no running or slide tackling are allowed.

Sessions are £3, but the first is free.

Have your say on services that support the most vulnerable

THE Council is currently consulting on advocacy services, which help the most vulnerable in society to have their voice heard, and supported living services, which help people to live independently.

Hackney would like to know what service users, key stakeholders and residents think about supported living, and to involve them in the planning of future services.

Supported living includes managing money; maintaining tenancies; helping residents to move on to alternative housing based on their needs; supporting education, training and employment; linking with community services;

improving health and well-being and promoting safety and security.

Those who benefit from supported living include older people, homeless people, people with mental health problems, people with learning disabilities, young people and victims of domestic violence.

Stormont House troopers

By Jacoba Mijnsen

To commemorate the opening of Stormont House Hospital, during the First World War in 1916, pupils of Stormont House School have helped organise an exhibition in collaboration with Hackney Archives and Museum.

The hospital was run by the Red Cross as a convalescent home, where wounded soldiers could recover.

Because their injuries were not life threatening, the patients were able to stay in a homely environment, surrounded by volunteers who took care of them. They came from Volunteer Aid Detachments, which had been set up by the Red Cross to provide assistance to general and military hospitals. Members were known as VADs and some famous names among them included Agatha Christie and Vera Brittain.

But they were not all women. Men, who for whatever reason could not go and fight at the front, were called up to give their time and energy to support the war effort at home.

One such man was Charles Hammond. He became an orderly in October 1915, joining the other volunteers at Stormont House Hospital when it opened in January 1916. Orderlies were needed to help with the heavier work and to be 'on guard' during night watches for any emergency. This could be to help a waking soldier in need of assistance, or to receive air raid warnings.

Mr Hammond was the doorkeeper at the hospital. He was also the only volunteer to be named in the account written after the war about the hospital.

This document,

“ Stormont House Hospital has such an uplifting effect after the inevitable lowering effects of the trenches ” called 'The Great War 1914-1918: record of the Hackney and Stoke Newington Division of the British Red Cross Society', can be found at Hackney Archives.

In it, the author wrote that those who spent time at Stormont House 'will remember with pleasure the geniality and faithful service of Mr C Hammond. The men loved him, and his cheery greeting was symbolic of the whole spirit of Stormont House'.

So what made this particular man so special? A look into his records only shows us that he lived on Upper Clapton Road with his wife Charlotte. On the 1911 Census, his profession is listed as an 'upholsterer' and cabinet repainer'.

The Census also gives his age as 69. This would make him 74 in 1916 when the hospital opened.

Unfortunately we do not have a picture of him but, going by his record at the Red Cross, life as an upholsterer must have been hard on him. On his card someone added a little note, stating that 'this gentleman is over 80 years of age'.

It goes on to say that he gave 1,090 hours in total from October 1915 to May 1919 when the records were written. This means he worked over 2.5 hours a month for nearly four years.

The stories of wars often tell us of the big events, the great players of the game. The names of those fallen on the battlefield can still be found on monuments, and rightly so. However, sometimes it is the names of those who made a difference to many on a somewhat smaller scale that deserve a mention.

In the making of the exhibition, the team tried to mention all the people who passed through the doors of Stormont House Hospital.

These are the stories of the nurses; women who often, for the first time, were given the opportunity to leave the house to work.

These are also the stories of the patients, who were treated as heroes. They describe the place as having such 'an uplifting effect after the inevitable lowering effects of the trenches'.

Because, of course, they were also soldiers. Men who had already known war and must have been aware that the pleasures and comforts were only temporary, and that as soon as they were 'better' they would be sent back to that particular hell.

Then, of course, there is the story of the pupils of the present day Stormont House School, which is on the site of the former hospital, and their journey of discovery into these worlds.

The exhibition, 'Stormont House Centenary: 1916-2016', is on at Hackney Museum until 16 July.

The display has been produced by pupils and Fifth Word theatre company, supported by the Heritage Lottery Fund.

The Mayor and councillors

Councillors are elected by Hackney residents and serve for four years. The last borough elections took place in May 2014.

Councillors have a range of responsibilities, including helping to oversee the Council and its services. They hold advice surgeries where residents can meet their local representative and ask them to take up issues that may be of concern. Generally they can help with Council related matters, but if the issue is the responsibility of another person or organisation, councillors can often point people in the right direction and tell residents who they need to see. Hackney has 57 councillors representing areas called wards – see map below.

Hackney has an executive Mayor, Jules Pipe, who is not a councillor, but is directly elected by the entire borough. The Mayor is the political leader of the Council, overseeing the budget and all Council services. Civic and ceremonial duties are undertaken by the Speaker of Hackney who is elected annually from among the borough's 57 councillors. The current Speaker is Cllr Rosemary Sales.
